QUESTION 1

In November 2025, Spyder Games and Speedy Simulator Gaming sued Mementum Lab over the massive Roblox hit Steal a Brainrot. The developers want a ruling that the agency doesn't hold a U.S. copyright over X and other "brainrot" characters. X, a figure that has somehow outlived its original memes, was also recently dropped into a major battle royale game.

QUESTION 1

Mementum had previously sent a cease-and-desist, arguing that creator Noxa, used human creativity to craft the character's eerie concept and went through multiple rounds of prompting to get its iconic sound just right. The developers briefly removed X but quickly brought the character back with real gusto, arguing that U.S. law doesn't protect AI-generated work without actual human authorship.

Id X.

QUESTION 2

X was heavily criticized by media outlets, with several writers labelling it AI slop. Several critics claimed the song was one of the loudest things ever put to record. One of them also opined that the song felt like "a computer guessing what a 'serious' song sounds like after being force-fed a slurry of megachurch anthems, and martyr anthems."

However, X became an Internet favourite, serving as the music to a lot of memes that featured Y, for whom the song was originally written.

ID X and Y.

QUESTION 3

In a thread about a popular animated series, a user renamed its two main characters after car brands. The cheerful protagonist, who tends to suck up everything around him, is named after the Italian maker of the Zonda. His best friend, who lives under a rock, is named after a Japanese car brand. Fans theorize this friend only acts dumb to make his buddy look smarter. The car brand's logo features a cluster of the same celestial objects that are his surname.

ID X, Y, Z.

QUESTION 8

During the promotional interviews for the latest season of the show X, two of its main actors, Y and Z, were interviewed by the Hindustan Times. During the promotional junket, the interviewer showed them an old, heavily edited image of Y rendered bald as part of a “before and after” hair-restoration poster used by a salon in Mumbai. Z, who loves memes related to the show, burst into uncontrollable laughter at the sight of his co-star’s edited photo, joking that he needed a copy to hang on his wall. Y admitted that he was familiar with the image and, taking it in good humour, laughed and said, “Shoutout to that barbershop because this still looks good.”

Id Y and Z.

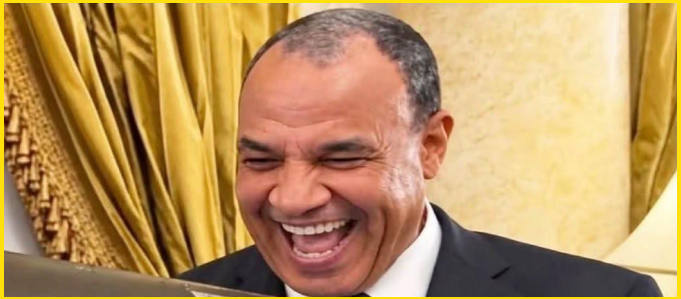

QUESTION 9

Indian content creators (such as Sameer and Prank_Preet) heavily mispronounced the English phrase in prank videos, shouting it at confused bystanders as gibberish.
