The Nicobar islands have a peculiar history for their name. The King X (1051CE-1063CE)of the dynasty Y used the Andaman and Nicobar islands as a strategic naval base to launch an expedition against the Srivijaya Empire (Indonesia). They called the island Ma-Nakkavaram (great open/naked island) as found in the Thanjavur inscription of 1050 CE. The dynasty Y was the main reason why we see Hinduism and Buddhism spread into the Southeast Asia and their architectural styles was also influenced by the dynasty Y. They were also known for building an extensive network of temples across their empire. The reign of X was marked by a focus on stability, consolidation, and continuity. While he may not have embarked on as many notable conquests or grand projects as some of his predecessors, his contributions were crucial in maintaining his Dynasty's power and cultural legacy during his time. European traveller Marco Polo also referred to this island as "Necuverran' which would have led to the modern name Nicobar during the English colonial period.
