Q1.

There are a couple of theories suggesting the origins of the particular world in the realm of sports. Some sources suggest a connection to the old English word "luff," meaning to hover around a place, which may have been used in the context of a player who was hanging around the baseline or net without scoring. Another theory proposes that it comes from the Dutch or Flemish word "lof" or "lofje," which means praise, signifying that they are "playing for praise" rather than points.
